EMBEZZLER GETS TERM IN PRISON

to serve five years. Sentence was pronounced under the indeterminate sentence law, which provides a maximum penalty of 10 years in cases of this nature.

Prior to the pronouncing of sentence, City Attorney Brown said, in substance:

"May it please the court, the prosecution feels that the sentences about to be imposed upon this defendant upon his several pleas of guilty should be most substantial, and by substantial I mean a substantial term of imprisonment."

"The law provides a penalty of imprisonment in cases of this kind not to exceed 10 years at hard labor, or by fine not to exceed five times the amount of the money embezzled."

"The defendant in these cases is not the young, immature man that Hoogs was, nor is he the old man of 63 years of age that Louis Abrams was when, upon their pleas of guilty, they were sentenced by this court to pay fines of $1000 each."

"Nor has this defendant, as I am informed and believe, made good a single cent of the property embezzled, whereas, in the cases of Hoogs and Abrams, complete restitution was made."

"It may be that, as a strict principle of law, the matter of restitution should not enter into the question of sentence but it always has and I believe always will influence the court to some extent in the passing of sentence."

"This defendant for years, as clerk in the circuit court, has been in a position to become familiar with the administration of criminal law, and to know full well the serious consequences of taking and spending other people's money and it cannot be said that the example of the penalties imposed in the Hoogs and Abrams cases influenced this defendant in any of his embezzlements, for the reason that this defendant committed these embezzlements long prior to and before these sentences of $1000 each were imposed."

"This defendant knew just as well as your honor knows, as I know and as his counsel knows, that the maximum term of imprisonment for embezzlement of $1000 or more was 10 years at hard labor."

"The embezzlements of the Egan property by this defendant covered a period of several years. They were a series of embezzlements committed by this defendant with his eyes wide open and knowing the fearful risk he ran by so doing."

"Under all these circumstances, it seems to the prosecution that if ever a case of embezzlement deserved, justified and called for a most severe and substantial term of imprisonment, this is the case."

"To do otherwise would only put a premium upon embezzlements."

Before pronouncing sentence, Circuit Judge Ashford said, in substance: "I wish to say regarding past criticism that it has been on the whole kindly. However, there has been some savage and vicious criticism on the sentences of Hoogs and Abrams but I will say that if I had to do it again I would repeat the sentences. Nevertheless, I feel that the sentences in those cases did not meet the moral sense of the community, which is something that should be recognized and respected by any person in a judicial or any other position."

"I believe that the moral sense of this community is right but that its stand is not always that taken by the newspapers. I differ between this case and the others, in one, the defendant was on the down-grade of life, an old man. In the other the defendant was very young, younger in intellectual development than in years. You, Marcellino, have neither of the excuses that these men had."

When arraigned a few days following his indictment, Marcellino pleaded guilty to one of the indictments. Today he entered pleas of guilty to the remaining three. Robert W. Breckons has been attorney for Marcellino since the beginning of the case. He was also attorney for Louis Abrams, former secretary and a director of the Hawaiian Trust Company, who recently was fined $1000 for embezzlement.

Following is a summary of the indictments against Marcellino:

On June 18, 1914, he converted to his own use stock certificate No. 3438 for nine shares of the stock of the Oahu Railway & Land Company, valued at $140 a share and the property of Julia Bishop Egan. Total value, $1260.

On June 18, 1914, he converted to his own use stock certificate No. 3744 for 39 shares of the stock of the Oahu Railway & Land Company, valued at $140 a share and the property of Julia Bishop Egan. Total value, $5460.

On July 13, 1914, he converted to his own use stock certificate No. 728 for 100 shares of the stock of the Honolulu Brewing & Malting Company, valued at $15 a share and the property of Julia Bishop Egan. Total value, $1500.

On May 21, 1915, he converted to his own use stock certificate No. 731 for 100 shares of the stock of the Honolulu Brewing & Malting Company, valued at $15 a share and the property of Julia Bishop Egan. Total value, $1500.

Marcellino was one of the most popular court officers in Honolulu, having been connected with local courts for more than 12 years. He has a wife and two children.

Chicago elevated railroad companies announced their willingness to grant an average increase of 2 cents an hour to the 4,000 employees of the roads.

JUDGE DEFENDS LIGHT FINES OF CROOK GAMBLERS

Objecting strongly to the intimation that the gamblers arrested in the New Allington hotel had gotten off easily, Judge Monsarrat said today that he thought the penalty was ample.

"Three hundred dollars is a heavy fine," Judge Monsarrat remarked, "and that was the penalty Johnson paid. The prosecuting attorney asked for a heavy penalty and I thought $300 was enough. Johnson had some crooked dice and a lot of gambling paraphernalia, but it was not being used in the game. As a matter of fact, Johnson was merely playing in the game, just like the men who were fined $25, and the heavy penalty imposed was because the gambling outfit was found in his room. Corbett, I am informed, was not really the man behind the game in room 10, but nevertheless he was fined $250."

"If these men were the only gamblers in town it might be different. But there are other games. From small games in private homes to games in clubs, and on up to the professional games there is other gambling here. Just as there is in every city. And the club members and stay-at-home players have no more right to gamble than anyone else.

Victims Need Guardians.
"The court is not established to look after men who have no more sense than to get in a crooked game. What the kind of men whom Johnson and such men need is a guardian. If they have not sense enough to know when they go into a 'quiet game,' where there are 40 or 50 decks of cards, rubber chips, and other things to complete the outfit, that it is a regular gambling place, they should be put in a home for the mentally weak. And while I fined Johnson and Corbett heavily, I did it on account of their character and the outfit they had and not entirely for the sake of the men who played with them."

"As to the stories about married men losing their money and depriving their wives of necessities, I do not believe much of that. Most of the men who played in the game at the Allington, as far as I can discover, were soldiers and single 'men about town,' who were looking for that kind of thing."

Twenty-two German guns captured at Loos, were exhibited by the British at the Horse Guards parade in London.
